

Seth

Seth came to us as so many of our dogs do, he was dumped at the shelter while we were closed. No explanation of who he was, why he was being dumped, how old he was, no history at all...Just him, chained to the fence...waiting for us to come get him. Seth was a very happy carefree guy, young and playful. He got along with everyone he met, dog and human alike. He was cross posted on www.blackpearldogs.com, who also sent his information to Gemini Rottweiler/Pitbull Rescue. Jen took an extra liking to him and, through several months of planning, set up transport and rescued him. After being in foster care for almost a year, the perfect family finally came to get him. Below are the happy results.

From Seth's rescuer and foster Mom:

I thought you would like to hear the good news, especially after we had a long, slow winter here. Seth was adopted last Friday to a very nice couple. They had recently lost their Rottie to cancer. They drove 2 hours last week to meet Seth and came back to pick him up Friday. He was much more active than they were used to with their last dog, but they loved him.

It sounds like its going really well so far. Yeah for Seth!!!
It makes my heart happy!

Hope you are all doing well!

Take care,
Jen Wold

Update from his new family below

Hi, Jen!

Seth has been a breath of fresh air for us! He was pretty good on the way home; he thought he was supposed to be a front-seat dog, so we had a little discussion about that, and pretty soon he settled down and snoozed in the back seat. He certainly knows how to negotiate, though--with lots of kisses!

He definitely has a lot of energy, but is settling in to our routine and becoming calmer with each day, as some of the adjustment anxiety is relieved. He loves to play and is a big snoop, but he is pretty easily redirected. You are right about his intelligence; he has learned some boundaries pretty quickly. I think that he will be awesome with some training and consistency. He really wants to please. He has only tried to lift his leg twice in the house so far, and stops immediately with a firm "no". I've been keeping him on a leash or in the same room with me, which hasn't been a problem; he really likes to stick close. He's a little bit of a chicken, so he's adjusting to some of the household noises (dishwasher, washing machine, etc.) Still, life seems to be an adventure for him, he just walks around smiling and wagging. He is so good-natured.

We're still planning to rename him, but haven't quite figured out yet what he wants his name to be. In the meantime, he gets called "good boy" a lot and gets lots and lots of hugs and attention. One of his favorite things is chasing the tennis balls down our steps into our lower level family room, and he is getting better with returning it. He also has fun with a rope toy, and just today decided to bring a five-gallon bucket into the house from outside to play with! He loves being outside, either in the backyard or up on the deck, and has a very keen interest in all the squirrels.

All in all, we're having a lot of fun watching his personality unfold; he's quite a character. We'll keep you in the loop with our adventures with him. Thank you, thank you, thank you for saving him and giving us the opportunity to have him in our life.

Kind regards,
Krista
